The siege of the Iranian Embassy which began on Wednesday lunchtime has affected IC students by restricting access to the halls of residence in Northside and has meant that tomorrow's Rag Fête will be held on the Queen's tower lawn instead of Princes Gardens.

Terrorists holding at least twenty hostages in London's Iranian Embassy, Princes Gate threatened to blow up the building if their demands were not met by noon yesterday. Weeks and Garden Halls were evacuated before the deadline was reached. Fortunately there was no explosion and the siege has reached a stalemate condition.

The siege was still on last night and Police expect it to continue for some time. Police Marksmen were placed on the roof of Weeks Hall.

Exhibition road is closed and there is traffic chaos. A Persian student was arrested after a chase past the Royal College of Art yesterday afternoon.

Iranian Students were prepared to exchange themselves for the hostages and their offer received much press coverage. The whole event has caught the attention of the World's Media and many students have been pictured in the National Press.

Yesterday afternoon many students from IC demonstrated near the Albert Memorial. The RCS piano was brought to the park and students sang songs and chanted slogans. A contingent from Guilds carried Anti-Ayatollah banners and they also shouted chants.

ALBUM REVIEWS

PAUL COLLINS' BEAT - Paul Collins' Beat

The group used to be called The Beat, but they have changed their name to Paul Collins' Beat to avoid confusion with The Beat (of Tears Of A Clown fame).

Of the twelve songs on the record, none really stands out above any of the others, although none of them provoke thoughts such as "What a load of rubbish". The music itself is fairly good from the point of view of musicianship and melodicism, but at the same time is predictable, boring and flat. When I say it is predictable, boring and flat, I mean it is just like all of the other Elvis Costello/Joe Jackson rip-offs that the whole world and his dog seem to be doing recently. In fact, that is the best description of the band — they are in the Costello/Jackson mould, with the same sort of songs (about girls, work, Rock'n'Roll (Maan), girls, etc). The trouble, however, is that they have none of the originality or visual impact of their peers.

An objective critique of the album; the songs are well written and well played and the band perform well within the limitations of 'Rock and Roll'. Subjective critique: the songs are written about the same old subjects, ie, girls, rock 'mythology', etc. The band play well, but threaten nothing and appear to lack a certain 'something'. Paul Collins' Beat are probably lauded as 'New Wave' in the USA, which they are — with respect to the Eagles.

To sum up: this is a mildly pleasant, easy listening album which is a little like aural wallpaper. None of the songs are mentioned by name, due to their anonymity.

HYPNOTISED - The Undertones

The return of the Undertones with their second eagerly awaited (by me and John Peel, at least) second album. It's good to report that this album is as good as their debut last year. Since the release of the classic Teenage Kicks EP in autumn 1978, the Undertones have hardly put a foot wrong.

There are fifteen songs on the album, all of which deserve the bored teenager seal of approval. Particularly outstanding are Hard Luck, Hypnotised, Whizz Kids, Under The Broadwalk, Tearproof, What's With Terry and last, but almost first, Wednesday Week, the single My Perfect Cousin is also included. The songs all deal with the joys and pain of teenage life: girls, insecurity, friends, etc. Feargal Sharkey's vocals are a well high perfect foil to the rest of the band, the slight quaver in his voice gives an added dimension to the meaning of the songs. The first track, More Songs About Chocolate And Girls is in many ways the

BABY'S GOT A GUN - The Only Ones

The Only Ones are destined to be one of those really great bands that never attain success on a large scale. They have already reached cult status with a small minority of rock worshippers, as their ability to pack out the Lyceum with devout and enthusiastic followers has shown.

With Baby's Got A Gun, their third album to date, they remain as inaccessible to the huge audience of pop radio stations as they did at the beginning of their career. Their music is such that it needs to be heard several times before it hooks, and there is no single that can be taken from the album which would receive enough airplay to really catch on; the best hope would be "Why Don't You Kill Yourself?", which just might ignite some spark of curiosity in a slumbering DJ who needs to fill an awkward two and a half minute gap in his programme.

Perret's voice is as hypnotic as ever, a strange but seductive quality from a larynx that does its best to imitate the quality of sound emitted from a concrete mixer, but backed by a band with as much experience behind them as musical muscle, the voice blends in with the overall sound and becomes as much a part of the Only Ones as the distinctive structure of the songs. The album does not have quite the same excitement as their last long player, Even Serpents Shine, but this is made up for by the extra polish that has gone into the latest disc, but as Serpents must have been one of the best albums to be released last year it would be difficult to better.

There is something quite irresistible about the pull that the highly original style of music can exert on the listener, the melodies are so seductive that it would be easy to forget the power behind the songs, laid down by Alan Mair, on bass, and Mike Kelly (ex-Spooky Tooth) on drums so strongly and efficiently that the rhythm and lead guitar work are just icing on the cake.

Two tracks are outstanding, both appear on the first side. Why Don't You Kill Yourself? is particularly noteworthy, both for its immediate, effective and very strong melody, and the vicious, but witty lyrics that help draw attention to a very strong song, if there is another single on the album it is this one. The other track worthy of particular mention is Deadly Nightshade, which manages to produce a great feeling of melancholy and depression whilst gently rocking the listener. Both these songs, like the whole album can stand the test of repeated playing, without saturating, and when the volume is turned up the band really show their muscle.

When it comes down to it, you may as well stop Pretending, forget about Getting Happy, this is the best album to emerge so far this decade.

SHAKIN' STREET - Shakin' Street

Shakin' Street's second album and I'd like to start off with a moan. Yet another band appear to depend on a female singer to sell their records; Fabienne Shine appears all clad in leather, inviting all sorts of S and M fantasies. Groups should sell records on the contents of the music not the contents of their singer's bra. Who would give Blondie house room, were it not for Ms Harry's pretty face?

The record, however, is not what I had feared, in fact it is reasonably good. Produced by Sandy Pearlman of Clash and Blue Oyster Cult fame, the record owes some of its punky sound to Pearlman's experience with the Clash. Ross the Boss (Dictator's guitarist) plays on the album as lead guitarist.

On the first side No Compromise, Solid As A Rock and No Time To Loose stand out, by nature of their speed and attack although the stupid applause and cheering mixed in on the beginning and various stages of Solid As A Rock are irritating. On the other side Generation X and So Fine are quite good. The songs themselves deal with the ever popular themes of revolution, authority, wild youth, etc; another album to drive your parent crazy (sic). Fabienne Shine's voice isn't quite in the Siouxsie Sue class, but compares favourably with the Nolans.

The group still have much to do before they become memorable. In Zigzag of Sept 1977, Tony Parsons said, in his review of the Mont de Marsan punk festival: "... and the crew with the moneythighed singer, Shakin' Street, churn out a kind of Punk Hit Parade Pastiche that bores me shitless." Well, they've improved on that.

best, acting as an introduction to the rest of the songs, advising you to "Settle down, cancel all engagements" to listen to "Teenage Dreams that are worth a mention" and "Dumb entertainment". Great. How is it, though, that the Undertones, with all their songs about teenage-kicks, etc, succeed where many other bands fail? For me, the answer is their almost painful normality; they look like people that you see out in the real world, and they come out and say what they mean directly, rather than coming over all mystic and serious (and boring) — they're a fun band.

Along with the Ramones, the Specials, the Jame, Burning Spear, Selectors and Linton Kwesi Johnson, the Undertones are one of the few groups /individuals I trust. This record is great. Search and enjoy.

BULLETS FLY OVER IC TENNIS COURTS

LIBYAN SHOT DEAD OUTSIDE WEEKS HALL

Two men were held by police on Friday night following the second killing in two weeks of a Libyan living in London.

Mahmoud Abbu Nafa, a Libyan lawyer was gunned down in the doorway of the Arab legal centre in Ennismore Gardens. As he fell to the ground, with several wounds, the alarm was raised by a neighbour, the showjumper Mr Richard Meade, and a man was quickly arrested by a passing patrol car. The other assassin was arrested outside the Hyde Park Hotel.

After the arrests officers from the Special Patrol Group with dogs conducted a yard-by-yard search of the neighbourhood and found a revolver which had been thrown over a wall about 200 yards away.

Several students from Imperial College heard the shots and many were interviewed by police. The gunmen struck shortly before 10 am, waking residents in Linstead and Weeks Halls. Police soon arrived and the area was sealed off. Press and Police went into Weeks Hall.

The World's Press covered the event and BBC News showed film of IC buildings including Police dogs sniffing around the roof of the Sports Centre.

An ITN camera crew filming the police search of the area outside the legal centre

The inquiry into the murder was led by the head of the Scotland Yard anti-terrorist squad, Mr Peter Duffy. He gave a Press conference outside Weeks Hall which gave the media at IC the chance to ask him questions.

The murder happened exactly two weeks after the killing at the Regent's Park mosque of Mr Mohammed Ramadan, a Libyan journalist and an outspoken critic of the Libyan leader, Colonel Gaddafi

IC LEAD EXPEDITION TO THE SOLOMAN ISLANDS

Next Sunday, 7:15 World About Us BBC2

The ideas behind this project were hatched in mid 1978 and shortly after the group was formed. After much thought the basic aims were set out: to travel to the Solomon Islands and document, in one particular area, the construction methods for the almost ubiquitous dugout canoe, and to try and find and record the construction details and legends behind the much rarer and larger war canoes, 'tomokos', previously used for headhunting.

The feasibility of the project soon became apparent. Travel is none too cheap and philanthropists with money to spare were few and far between. So, typewriters were dusted off and the two-fingered race for sponsorship began. Regular meetings between London, Oxford, Sidmouth, Brighton and Cambridge produced much by the way of equipment lists, a lot of which was already being collected, but little of the vital cash, and as we had calculated on a budget of £6,000 things began to get a little disturbing.

Our luck changed when we acquired the approval and support of the Imperial College Exploration Board. Other organisations then followed with their support or at least showing some interest. We were then fortunate enough to receive one of the Mick Burke awards, six were given out of 400 applicants, but our troubles were not over. The point of no return came in March 1979 when, in order to qualify for the cheapest air fares possible tickets had to be purchased. By this time we had raised enough to buy the tickets but with little to spare. However, we took the plunge knowing that if it transpired that we couldn't depart in June due to lack of funds, we wouldn't get anything back on the tickets!

Having begged and borrowed the necessary remaining cash, thrown out all but the bare minimum of clothing from our packs, completed the customs formalities for all our rather heavy camera gear, we finally set off for the Pacific.

We were still apprehensive when we reached the capital Honiara, as we hadn't got the required government research permit, due to bureaucratic delays on their part, and thus could have been refused entry, but we passed through customs unscathed and were welcomed by someone unknown to any of us. It was pure luck that anyone met us at all; a letter to our initial contact, who was then on leave, had been intercepted by this person. We were very grateful for the ride into town and for the initial help we were given. Luckily, we sorted out most things and obtained our official documents in the following few days.

We left the mission hostel where we stayed for a week and joined the colourful, noisy, and cheerful throng of islanders who travelled with us up to the Western Province. An old battered boat, bought from the Japanese complete with permanent list, served as our means of transport. During our twenty-four hour journey we went through our first Pacific storm in which we got a little wet. Turns were taken to sleep in the cabin that we had obtained primarily to store our equipment, and there we discovered the delights of having coachroaches crawl over your legs and face just as you doze off. The place was infested. Those of us who stayed there for more than half an hour had to sleep with the light on.

We finally arrived in Munda one of the larger settlements in the area, which, as well as having a jetty, boasts a one mile airstrip built by Americans during the war. Here we established our base with the help of contacts in the forestry department.

Our two female members of the expedition claimed their first accidents within four days of our arrival. One, while testing the cool lagoon waters, swam through a sea urchin colony, which left her with about forty spine tips in her right hand and wrist. The other developed a serious allergic reaction against tuna fish, which at that time we were eating a lot.

Having recovered from these two setbacks, we quickly acclimatised to the heat and humidity as we walked to the surrounding villages to speak to the elders and anyone else who had any knowledge of canoes and associated custom stories, and in some cases we spoke to old men who had actually taken part in headhunting raids, the last of which was about 1910. We mostly spoke in Pidgin English, which we picked up fairly rapidly, and used interpreters from the villages when necessary. As we talked, so the stories and legends built around tomokos were divulged to us, our information on construction techniques grew and our list of possible contacts in other villages expanded.

To reach the futher places, long and often hazardous trips were made in large dugouts fitted with outboard motors. Constantly aware of the shark infested waters of the Pacific, we were driven by skillful islanders who knew the seas well, which often threatened to swamp the dugouts. On one such journey we had to turn back having already travelled forty-five minutes because of heavy seas. On reaching the village we obtained another slightly larger canoe and set out again. By this time it was late in the evening, but we had to press on and navigate by moonlight in very heavy swell as we took with us a young boy who earlier had a fish hook cut his eye open, and we were heading in the direction of the nearest dressing station. Sadly, in such a place little can be done for this type of accident. Although we reached the station, we discovered later that he didn't reach proper medical aid until four days later, far too late to save his eye.

We would spend up to one week in any one village and return to our 'base' every two or three weeks. We often split up and went off in two groups varying the combination of expedition members each time. On arrival at a village we explained our purpose in Pidgin and were almost always given accommodation in one of the village huts. We tried, successfully, to become part of the village in which we stayed, instead of being just of novelty value to the islanders, by living with families and eating their staple foods of cabbage, sweet potato, yam and taro which they delighted in showing us how to prepare. We also attended their feasts, a wedding, a baptism and were shown the construction of a bamboo band.

Life wasn't all roses; sanitation was often a problem . . . especially always followed us around and we were mercilessly bitten by sandflies, mosquitoes and in some areas bed bugs, the bites of which went septic very fast, as did any form of wound.

Slowly we added to our record of both the dugouts and tomokos meeting in our tracks one of the last men able to build a war canoe. Altogether we met with great success and it was with some sadness that we waited for the boat to return to Haniara and thence homewards.

CAMPAIGN COFFEE

When you buy a jar of instant coffee only about 37% of what you pay will get back to the country from which the coffee beans came. About 10% will go to the retailer, and the rest will go to Nestlé's, General Foods or Brooke-Bond Liebig, if you buy a 'brand name', or to Solcafe (J Lyons & Co) or Tenco Ltd (Coca-Cola Ltd) if you buy a supermarket 'own label'.

Although the producing countries receive only 37% of what you pay, it makes up over a quarter of the export earnings of eleven out of fifty producing countries — all third world. In Burundi, it accounted for 83% of export earnings for 1972-77.

In 1963, soon after independence, the new Tanganyikan government decided, in conjunction with their policy of self-reliance to process the coffee itself, since this is where the main profits lie.

But they have had many marketing problems (due to no small degree by Nestlé's 'assistance') and until recently, Tanzanian instant coffee has only been marketed in Zambia, Kenya and Tanzania itself as 'Africafé'.

It is now available in Britain as 'Campaign Coffee' and there will be a stall selling it in the JCR on Friday (ie, TODAY) lunchtime.

TRAVEL TRIP-UPS

AND HOW TO AVOID THEM

This month's edition of National Student (the NUS newspaper) contains an eight page travel supplement, concentrating mainly on the pitfalls of cheap flights to European destinations, particularly Greece. Prices quoted are often for off-peak season travel only, and an example is given of a return flight to Athens advertised at £119, but which did not include UK or Greek airport taxes or fuel surcharges, increasing the real cost of the flight to £148.50.

St Seal Travel* offer flights to a wide variety of European destinations at highly competitive prices (eg, peak Athens return £124).

USIT* deal with student charter flights (eg, Athens return in July £109), but to be eligible you must have a valid International Student Identity Card and be aged between sixteen and thirty.

For holidays which include accommodations (either in hostels or camping) the National Student article recommends the BST* products; however, these are only available to France, Italy and Greece.

In general, the advice given to people wanting to book a flight abroad is simple — always read the small print (especially with regard to surcharges) and book through your local student travel office — it's their job to give you the best deal available.

CRICKET REPORT

BALLIOL COLL (OXFORD) vs IC 2nds

From the moment we set off for the M4 to Oxford (instead of the M40!) it was obvious that Saturday was fated for disaster.

Arriving badly jarred by Salter's handling of a transit (I've seen more control from a US helicopter pilot) the team began to familiarise itself with the locations of pubs, chippies, and local women. (All cricketers like to eat, drink and score). However, such merriment had to be delayed due to the inconvenience of these Bally-old chappies wanting to play us at cricket.

Salter won the toss, and elected to bat; this was to prove a teensie-weensie bit careless. In brief (how else?) Kenrick (superstar and stand-in muppet) scored twenty, Salter took his three-match aggregate against Balliol to zero and no-one else troubled the scorers for more than nine runs, despite Sen's arduous half-of-the-match innings of one.

Being all out within approximately an hour and a half, for 51, our confidence was further boosted by the promise of marmite and cucumber sandwiches for tea.

This inspired, Ratman and Sen bowled some spirited rubbish and Balliol were soon 52 for 1.

Tea was taken and a ten 9-ball over beer match arranged. The teams reversed their batting orders, and everyone was to bowl. Supersub Redmond replaced Head-band Chadband (injured tripping over his hair) and scored a lusty sixteen. Croft also played some useful shots and Salter actually opened his account! Unfortunately, IC fell four short of the Balliol total of 75 with Hewkin next-man-in, waiting to score a second match-winning duck.

The Balliol bar overflowed with jugs overflowing with beer, but Salter insisted on removing the team at nine o'clock, leaving Hewkin and Chadband to return with the Sunday (Prince Panthers) XI.

UK COLLEGE NEWS

— Leeds loan —

Leeds Poly has borrowed £140,000 from Samuel Smiths Brewery to buy a hotel in the Lake District.

Students must sell 7,200 pints (exclusively) of Sam Smiths a week. The students will own the Wharton Grange Hotel in Carnforth by 1990. The brewery, in return for the selling of their ale say that 10 per cent of the loan will be deemed repaid each year.

The Union President Stevan Mrvos defended the union's decision as an attempt to translate their liquid assets into a fixed investment at a time when student union financing is under attack by the Government.

— Grants —

The main rates of grant for students living in Hall or lodgings have been increased by 14% to £1,695. For students living in the parental home the new grant is £1,125.

The total cost of mandatory grants in Britain next year will be around £400 million. The total number of students receiving them will be about 355,000.

— Housing bill —

Local authorities will be able to evict students at a days notice when the new Housing Bill becomes law in June this year.

A special clause excludes students from security of tenure in council or housing association accommodation.

— Bang —

The magazine Safety News states that an incorrectly fitted battery in your calculator could cause a dangerous explosion.

A university employee who placed an HP7 battery in a calculator back to front caused a violent explosion in which pieces of the battery travelled over 20 feet.

Fortunately no-one was injured. Safety News explained that the three other batteries in the calculator were charging the misplaced one, causing it to emit hydrogen gas which could not escape except by explosion.

Similar accidents could occur with any piece of equipment if people did not read the instructions properly.

— Invaders —

An Oxford University student has criticised his friends for using 'systems' on space invaders.

The top scores obtained at Oxford are just over 29,000 (obtained without using a system).

An example of a system is where the player leaves four vertical columns intact at one side, and a sole invader on the seventh column from that side, top row.

He then stays in the gap between the block and the sole invader, knocking out each horizontal row when it reaches the bottom, 'safe' level.

Getting rid of them this way is fairly easy, interminably boring and not really in the spirit of the game.

This is how Japanese and US record-holders build up massive scores.

— NUS —

Recent votes on the NUS have shown that large numbers of colleges do not wish to disaffiliate from the National Union of Students.

The two large colleges voting to quit NUS were King's College, London and Dundee University. Harper Adams Agricultural College Wolverhampton also voted to leave.

Reading have now returned after a UGM voted by 435 to 26 to rejoin.

Nottingham stayed in by 1,888 to 1,138. Kent voted 461 to 115 to stay in and the following colleges also remained in:

Exeter 1,000 to 200, Durham 334 to 28, School of Slavonic and East European Studies, Southampton 500 to 15, University College London 1,100 to 600, St Georges Medical School and Wye College.

An attempt to have a referendum at Imperial failed last term when the EGM ended prematurely due to inquoracy.

— May 14 —

The NUS have warned that trade union action against governemnt economic policies could cause 'considerable' chaos to examination arrangements.

Many colleges will be affected by a TUC day of action on May 14, designed to show the breadth of popular opposition to government policies.

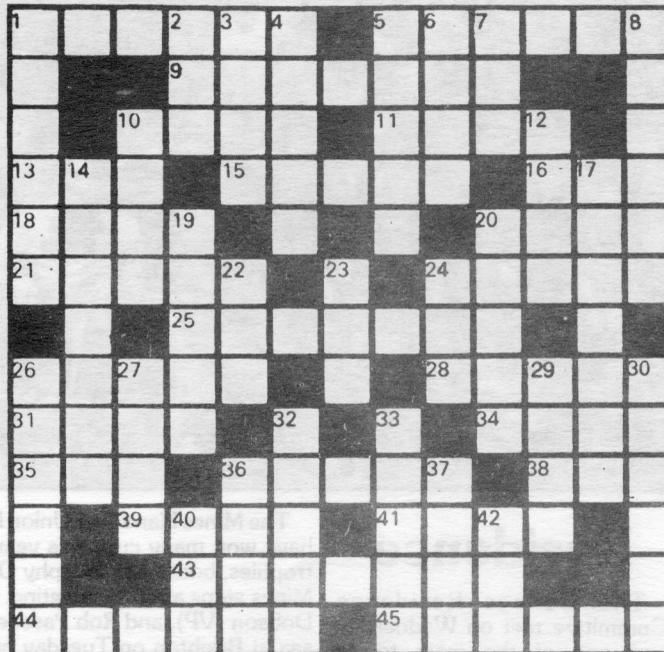

Completed crosswords must be handed into the FELIX Office by 1:00pm Wednesday, 7th May. The first drawn correct answer will be awarded a prize of £1.

RED CROSS WEEK

Red Cross Week will be held from Sunday 4th May to Saturday 10th May when every effort will be made to collect in this area for local Red Cross funds. Please can we have your help in collected in pubs during this week and on the streets next Saturday. Although a donation would be welcome, your help is more important. We need volunteers urgently. Please contact Simon Chandler, Maths 2 or Roger Serpell on Int 3707 or come to the Union Lower Lounge on Saturday 10th May between 9:00 and 10:00am to collect your tin and licence.

Residence

The College Residence Committee met on Wednesday and one of the main topics discussed was the question of rents for next year. After long and sometimes bitter discussion, the committee failed to come to a decision over the level of rents that the residence committee finance sub-committee wants to impose next year, though it did vote to make a representation to college over the level of repayments of the Evelyn Gardens lease.

Further decisions reached included the move to end wardens places in hall.

ICRN

Dear Colin

I object to being described as being "not bothered to turn up" for the Presidents' Race in the IC Games.

I should like to point out that I was at that time in the middle of my finals and unfortunately could not spare the time to support the Games, much as I would have liked to have done.

I did, however, ask my Hon Sec to replace me in the race, but we were told that substitutes would not be allowed.

May I also point out to the organisers that I was neither informed of the date of the Games nor instructed that there would be a Presidents' event. I suggest that better advance publicity would increase the support.

Yours

Jo

President, C&GU

The Mines Handover Union Meeting took place on Tuesday. Mines have won many cups this year and the above pic shows the silver trophies, bottle and Morphy Oar that were proudly displayed on the Mines steps after the meeting. Keith Maynard (RSM President), Cris Dobson (VP), and Rob Pascoe were ceremoniously thrown into the sea at Brighton on Tuesday night.

We are in the middle of an international crisis. The Police have to be patient. We need to keep cool. Imperial is in the front line because of its location in the Arab cente of London.

No student from IC has been killed so far but there is a chance that the situation could arise that we could be in the line of fire or even a target.

Happily the Rag fête is still taking place tomorrow and helpers are still needed. Meet on the Queens lawn at 10.00 am. On Bank Holiday Monday Rag will be taking part in the procession preceding Fulham Carnival.

Congratulations to Dave Fuller in being elected IC Radio Station Manager for next year.

I apologise to IF for any bad feeling generated by last weeks 'SUN' FELIX. The SUN got its own back, yesterday, by putting me on page three!

See you at the Rag Fête and hopefully we'll catch up on some articles that we promised to give you this week plus a full report of the Jez trip to Brighton in next week's FELIX

MOTORPLAN INSURANCE CONSULTANTS LTD.

If you have just had your insurance renewal notice, you will have seen how the cost of motor insurance has gone up. For example, a £50 premium in 1974 would probably be £100 today, especially if you have stayed with just one company over this period.

But there's no reason why you should stay with the same insurance company, and in times like these it makes much more sense to shop around each year. Many motorists already do, because recent legislation means that there is now no risk involved - yet quotations from different companies for the same policy can vary by over 40%

The problem, of course, is knowing how to go about finding the best deal, which is where we come in. We analyse the rates charged by all the reputable insurers - including the household names to obtain the best premium for your particular circumstances. We will send you the information within 7 days.

If you are about to renew your motor insurance, fill in the form opposite and send it off to us - we've paid the postage, so you can do it right now. (If the renewal date is only a few days away, telephone instead). Then we will send you details of the best deal we can find, together with a proposal form.

This is a completely free service. If you decide to take up our offer, we will make all the necessary arrangements, and there will still be no charge to you over and above the insurance premium.

While you are insured through us, we will give you a complete service, advise you relative to any claims, arranging foreign travel insurance and so on.

When you have to renew again next year, we will check your premium again automatically and send you a reminder.

Of course there is no obligation whatever, but if most people are paying over the odds for their motor insurance, doesn't it make sense to be certain you're not one of them?
