

Nightline Crisis

The future of West London Nightline may be in doubt unless other London Colleges are prepared to provide a larger proportion of the funds. College Secretary John Smith has indicated that IC will not be able to maintain the current level of financial support for Nightline in 1986-87.

West London Nightline is an information and counselling service run for and by students in London, and is based in Princes Gardens, South Kensington.

Last year the total cost of Nightline was £10,769. This figure included the rent for flat which Nightline occupies, £3000, and the director's salary of £4,469 as well as a telephone bill of £1,352. Of this £1,835 was provided by participating students unions, including ICU.

In 1984-85 Imperial College provided the accommodation, and paid the phone bill and a substantial fraction (40%) of the director's salary.

ICU Welfare Officer Peter Wilson has sent a circular to all London University student unions and student newspapers, highlighting the threat posed to Nightline. Mr Wilson explained that Imperial College will be prepared to continue funding accommodation and administration costs, but that other colleges must make a substantially larger contribution if Nightline is to survive. He called upon all student unions to let their college administration know of the difficulties. In particular he asks that all college secretaries be made aware of the problems before the meeting of the Secretaries of Schools (University of London) on February 28. A proposal will be put forward at the meeting, suggesting that Nightline should become a University service, and the cost spread thinly over a large number of colleges.

FELIX spoke to College Secretary John Smith about the Nightline issue yesterday morning. Mr Smith pointed out that other colleges are planning to withdraw money from Nightline, and he was not enthusiastic about IC having to support the service. He was unhappy about the present cost of £4 per call to Nightline.

West London Nightline took over 2,600 calls in 1984-85, on average 12 per night during term-time. Of these around 25% were of 'counselling' type, rather than straightforward requests for information.

College Win Case

Imperial College has been awarded High Court damages of around £850,000 against the firm of architects who built the Electrical Engineering building. The ruling against Norman & Daburn, announced on Wednesday, brings to an end legal action which first began more than eight years ago.

In 1977 it was discovered that the ceramic tiles used to face the Electrical Engineering building, built between 1962 and 1963, were breaking away and so causing a serious safety hazard. Work to replace the tiles was finally begun over two years ago in 1983, after College secured a loan for the repairs from the UGC. When the work was completed, and the full cost known, College were able to press ahead with legal action against the builders.

Norman & Dawburn have been ordered to pay College a sum in the region of £850,000 plus interest and legal costs. College Secretary John Smith said yesterday that the damages awarded by Judge David Smout, QC, totalled more than £1million plus costs. Mr Smith added that the architects were likely to appeal against the ruling. (Judge Smout has awarded a 14 day stay of judgement pending consideration of any appeal). Mr Smith said that the bulk of the award would go to the UGC, and since the cost of the repair work had been approximately £1.5million the College had lost money.

Security Problem

Residents of Falmouth-Keogh Hall are having problems with security. Post has been stolen from the letter racks with such regularity that all mail is now retained at the messenger's desk. This has resulted in students having to queue and wait to collect their post, and the messenger and security guards having a lot more work to do. In the most recent Falmouth-Keogh newsletter, concern is expressed over the general state of security in the Hall. There has been regular stealing from landing refrigerators to the value of hundreds of pounds. Strangers have been seen wandering around the Hall telephones and games machines have been vandalised and there have been thefts from residents' rooms.

Paul Jowitt, the warden of Falmouth-Keogh, has managed to obtain several improvements which include better lighting around the Southside shop and

FELIX

This week I had planned a twenty page special Valentine's issue. It would have contained a guide to Dateline agencies, a problem page, etc. Everything had to be cut because of technical problems. This week I've worked bloody hard to get a basic FELIX out. All I get in return is letters of complaint. Dave Pearce has complained that the news stories about RSMU are one-sided. This is because we tried repeatedly to contact Dave on Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday and could not find him. I've also had numerous letters complaining about our story on the Bishop of Durham. Like any newspaper, we have limited space for news. This means that you have to select the points that will be of greatest interest to the greatest number of readers. FELIX is not some Christian newsletter that can ramble on at length about the details of Dr Jenkins speech. Over the last few weeks we have had several LONG Christian articles. The Christian societies have had more than their fair coverage. FELIX can not cover every news story as the people concerned would wish. If anyone else comes and complains about the Bishop of Durham article I will be extremely rude. You have been warned.....Incidentally if anyone is still interested in my job after this moan, please come and see me in confidence as soon as possible.

Southside

I spent half an hour on Wednesday with Pat, the Southside Messenger. He is worked of his feet because he is having to answer so many enquiries for mail. College must do something about this. Pat is being overworked. In the meantime may I suggest that all Southside residents only check their post every other day or check it in the afternoon to ease Pat's load.

Sabbatical Elections

Unfortunately I can not give you any details about how to go about producing publicity for the sabbatical elections because of production problems. Would anyone likely to want to use the Print Unit for publicity, come and see me in confidence on Tuesday so that I can discuss arrangements.

Spencer: Proposterous Twit

Dear FELIX,

I see that preposterous twit Tony Spencer is back at his ranting. Whilst I won't comment about the bulk of his egotistical rambling in last week's letters page, I must object to the partisan rubbish in his last few sentences. For a start the Below the Belt column in FELIX has been running for years longer than the trivial and cliquey Vicious Rumours page in Boredsheet (only accurate material in the title?). Further seeing as I myself wrote the Below the Belt column last term, it owes as much to my good friend Hissing Sid (and Frank Rowsell for those who remember him) as to anyone else.

I don't want to sound pompous with all this but I would just like to say that I know people who will go to great lengths to avoid Mr Spencer ranting at them for hours. Why someone of the advanced years and hair of Mr Spencer (I myself have spent years trying to look that aged) should waste his time promoting all that is worst in CCU rivalry I don't know. How such a mind benderingly boring person as Tony can slag FELIX when his idea of literature is this year's Rag Mag is beyond my puny brain. Personally I find mountain cycling in Albania far more appealing than listening to Spencer's drivel.

Yours wondering why ICU spent £1500 on Spencer's Rag Mag

Hallworth Get Your Act Together

Dear Sir

Whilst finding Peter Hallworth's letter in January 21 FELIX very informative, there are some points that I would like to query. Firstly, misuse of property and equipment by residents is cited as a, presumably substantial, loss of funds and I would like him to specify what actual type of damage was done.

It was mentioned that on site communication, coordination and supervisory qualities were 'severely affected' due to the absence of the Housekeeper, through illness. If this was such an important problem why was there no temporary replacement found for the Housekeeper, or appropriate transfer of duties to someone in authority?

I concede that Mr Hallworth's argument that painting the outside of the Houses was to prevent further crumbling of the fabric may be valid but I should mention that the railings of the Houses were painted also, which is surely one of the most cosmetic repairs to Evelyn Gardens possible, whilst inside, window locks and pigeon-hole locks—surely a priority in view of the appalling state of security, remained unrepaired or absent.

Finally I find Mr Hallworth's comments that 'there is little point in increasing College security when we are surrounded by so many self-appointed Clerks of Works' needlessly destructive and implicative that his organisation and deputation of responsibility leaves much to be desired. Surely Mr Hallworth should be getting his act together?

Yours etc

Chemistry Cash Wasted

Sir

I write to draw your reader's attention to the new garage being erected at the rear of Chemistry 1. Unbelievably, this structure is destined to house some of the vehicles of Professor Hartley and his wife, who live in the penthouse on top of Biochemistry.

With College spending much time moaning about lack of finance I am astonished that a four figure sum of money can be found to provide a garage to house cars which aren't even used for College business. To make matters worse, several parking spaces have been lost—parking spaces used by people who are on College business.

As they are local residents, one wonders why they can't get a street space from the council, and leave the car park for those who drive into College each day.

Yours etc
Nick Davies

Pinko Pete Writes

Dear Hugh,
I've said this before at the time of the Socialist Society picket of Keith Joseph, but in answer to John Martin's letter (FELIX 728) I must repeat that the defence of our education and welfare isn't a left-wing cause. No student, be she/he Left, Right or Centre, should be so stupid as willingly to consign him/herself to the poverty which Sir Keith has planned for us. Neither should we stand by and allow the destruction of the education system on which our younger sisters and brothers will depend.

That our Union should produce the impressive turnout it did for Gren Manuel's leaflet protest shows, I believe, that most IC students feel the same way. Dave Kingston, hardly a Left-wing activist, attended the protest, as did J Martin Taylor.

Finally, in the light of the decision by KQC students in their recent referendum to affiliate to the National Union of Students (FELIX 729), and that by UCL at their UGM not to disaffiliate, may I congratulate those students on their sound judgement, and express the hope that Imperial won't be too long in following their example. Faced as we are with threats to our education and to our standards of living while at College, the importance of national representation for all students, and of co-ordinated response to the threats has never been greater.

Yours,
Pete Hobbs.

RSMU Defended

Dear Hugh,
I'd just like to comment on two of your articles:

(1) Every Wednesday is an RSM barnight.
(2) I gather the RSM Rugby Club's 'disgusting behaviour' consisted of standing on a table singing 'We're going up sunshine mountain'-a totally innocuous song.

(3) The RSMU budget was a statement of expenditure, not the final claim to ICU, which has to have income deducted from it. Even so it has risen, but this is due to a rise in interest in RSMU and the new clubs being founded within it.

But did FELIX ever try to ask our side? No! Yet again one sided rumour is printed, and the resultant image not cared about. I personally am beginning to get pissed off with this anti-RSMU stance. I Hope next year's Editor will try and ask the other side before printing inflammatory rumours.

I remain yours, etc

Sexist SF Soc

Dear Hugh,
I wish to moan bitterly about the grossly sexist attitude displayed by Dave Clements (I believe), SF Soc Chairman (on permanent loan from South Bermondsey Sewage Reprocessing Unit) ie '...when men were men and women did what they were told' in last week's advert (hardly a feature) for 'Picyornose 4'. It is bad enough having to endure the Cosmic Ferret's abysmally pretentious stories which weekly masquerade as articles, let alone being subjected to his doctrinally unsound attitudes. I suggest that Temporary Women's Officer Christine Taig should ritually disembowel him in Beit Quad next Wednesday lunchtime. It should do wonders for her presidential election campaign...

Yours non sexistly

MSc Arseholes

Sir,
When UG freshers come to IC they tend to fit in pretty quickly. Some are a pain—maybe they've had a year in industry, or come from public school, and think they know how things ought to be—but it's their first experience of college, so they moderate their views. PhD freshers are fine too—either working quietly, or being of such hyper intelligence that they fit into the 'IC Attitude' easily. Most MSc's are great guys/women too—but some are real arseholes. They come from some crappy provincial little university where they were top dogs, and bring their crappy provincial little attitudes to Imperial.

There is a case in point who attends the MSc/3rd Year AI lectures in Computing. What a wally! He banters the lecturer with pointless quips, interrupts with irrelevant quips and then loudly admonishes any other student murmuring in the background. Yet he seems to have no comprehension of how incredibly irritating he is to everyone else.

I am not criticising his ridiculous dress or the way he wrinkles his nose, like a pekinese on heat—each to his own. What I object to is his attitude to lectures. At IC we listen reasonably quietly and attentively. Questions are used to make ideas more comprehensible. They should not be used to score points to enhance a student's personal standing. It is a pain in the butt that one student can so completely waste eighty people's time for no better reason than to try to make himself look good.

Yours faithfully,
3rd Year Computing Undergraduate (Name supplied but withheld by request)

Thanks

Dear All,
May I, on behalf of Pete and myself, say a big thank you to everybody, especially Tom, for the support which the guests at the RCS Annual Dinner gave us on the announcement of our engagement. We expected everybody to fall about laughing but they were great and it was just about the best evening of our lives so far. Cheers!

Enthusiastic Bishop Ignored

Dear Hugh,
What a miserable and misleading little article FELIX carried on the Bishop of Durham's visit last week. It conveyed nothing of the infectious enthusiasm with which the Bishop spoke, nor the delight with which he was received by his large audience. Here was a man alive with the faith, knowledge and experience of God, doing his uttermost to bring together his faith and the realities we live with without fudging or dodging the issues.

When he was asked the inevitable questions I heard him say that the resurrection was something objective God did to change the disciples' belief that Jesus was dead into the conviction that he was alive and active in their lives. As for the virgin birth he 'wouldn't put it past God to do it that way, especially if God was acting as she.' but he had to note there were other virgin birth stories about gods and heroes current at the time.

It would be refreshing if FELIX reporters wrote with a fraction of the Bishop's liveliness, wit and integrity. It would do your credibility some good too.

*Yours sincerely
David Ashforth
Chaplain*

Bishop Summarised

I felt the Bishop of Durham said some good and bad things when he came to college last Wednesday. Some of the good things he said were

-Need enough faith to face reality

-One cannot oversimplify the many complex issues of the world

-One has to be clear over the fundamentals of one's faith

-Jesus is alive

The bad things were

-There is not enough evidence for the virgin birth for me to believe it (if this is true the Christian faith is pointless as if Jesus was born of human father he would be born a sinner and only if he was sinless could his death and resurrection save man from the penalty of sin - eternal death.)

-Jesus is not the only way to God (goes against what Jesus says in John 14 v 6 'I am the way the truth and the life no one can come to the Father but by me'.)

-The good news of the gospels is that God is God of the Universe

(True but much more important is that Jesus' death and resurrection can save man from sin.)

-There is no form of evidence for the physical resurrection

(If they could, the Jewish leaders in the first century would have disproved the physical resurrection but they could not as it was true.)

To close I quote Romans 1v 17 'He who is put right with God through faith shall live'.

Moonie's Fight Back

4 St Andrews Road
London W14
01-385 4762

Dear Sir,
FELIX recently carried a story 'Moonie Blues' (31st Jan.) containing several untruths which I would like to correct.

1) CARP and the Unification Church

CARP is a movement for people seeking high moral and spiritual standards. Membership is not restricted to members of the Unification church, although we are proud to have Reverend Moon as our founder.

2) The Myth of Brainwashing

The charge that Moonies practice brainwashing techniques has been fully discredited by recent sociological and psychological studies.

Prominent among these is the 'The Making of the Moonie' (Basil Blackwell, £12) by Dr. Eileen Barker of LSE. Since the publication of this and other studies, the allegation of brainwashing has been discontinued.

3) CARP 'offers students a release from the drudgery of work'

Students seeking a release from work, or an easier path, will not find what they are looking for in CARP. CARP expects its members to excel in academic studies. We want to demonstrate how to live for the benefit of others and for the sake of God and mankind. This is not easy, but it is truly worthwhile for those who can rise to the challenge.

4) 'People who join...are separated from their families (and) their belongings'

Dr. Barker's study also exposes this allegation as untrue. The great majority of members are in regular and open contact with their parents. There is no evidence of anyone being deprived of any possessions upon joining the Unification Church or CARP. Some like to make contributions, but these are neither solicited nor required.

5) 'People who join...suffer psychological damage'

This is nonsense. In ten years of membership, I have never met anyone who has suffered 'psychological damage' as a result of contact with us! This is a media invention now totally rejected by serious scholars and observers.

The Reverend Moon is also described in the article as 'a conman'. Nothing could be further from the truth. In recent years, leading figures from all walks of life have come to know and respect the Reverend Moon for the great work he is doing - scientists (including Nobel Laureates), professors, politicians, ministers and other religious leaders...even journalists. In reality, the Reverend Moon has always been ready to invest not only money, but also his blood, sweat and tears for many projects; often these are not even associated with the Unification movement. Recognition of this work is also reflected in recent media coverage. The trend nowadays is neutral, often supportive. The FELIX article is anachronistic in its simple, inaccurate and prejudiced response.

In conclusion, I urge all IC students to find out for themselves about the challenging work of CARP and the Reverend Moon, by contacting us at the address given.

*Yours sincerely,
Mike Balcomb
CARP Director*

Handbook Editor Elected

Judith Hackney is to be the Editor of the 1986 Union Handbook. Ms Hackney was elected by paper ballot at Tuesday's IC UGM. Sarah Kirk was the only other candidate for the post. Proposing Ms Hackney, Alan Rose said that he believed that her work on IC Radio, STOIC and FELIX, along with her two years as a first year student at College, would be invaluable qualities for the job. Ms Kirk, the FELIX Reviews Editor, was proposed by last year's Handbook Editor, Nigel Atkinson.

Among the other issues debated at the UGM was a motion instructing the Union to campaign for flexible licensing hours in English and Welsh pubs. Despite some concern that this would contribute to the Union's 'boozy image', the motion was carried. The last motion to be dealt with proposed that the ULU policy of having 16 female sessions at their Health Complex, compared with only 12 male sessions, amounted to sexism. The motion was attacked by External Affairs Officer Grenville Manuel and DP Dave Kingston, who reported that there is a far greater demand for female-only sessions, and the motion was defeated by a clear majority.

One further motion was on the agenda, proposing that Union publications should refuse advertisements from Barclays Bank, and that the Union should discourage students from banking with Barclays. However, the quorum was successfully challenged by Andy Juscott of DOC 3 who believed that the poor attendance would not provide a representative vote. The meeting was then brought to a close.

Estimates Revised

The Royal School of Mines Union have reduced their estimate for next year from £17 000 to £14 000. The Estimate of RCSU and C&CU are £11 000 and £14 000 respectively.

ICU Deputy President Dave Kingston has suggested that these estimates may be accepted, with perhaps only a few additional cuts. This would mean that RSMU would be allocated more money than RCSU, which has more than twice as many students.

Mr Kingston justifies this state of affairs by explaining that RSMU members tend to be more active in their union than their counterparts in Guilds and RCS, thus meriting the extra expenditure. He also commented that his attitude towards such matters was not swayed by the number of students who would benefit from the money, but the intensity of the activity involved, and the dedication and commitment of the people involved.

Union Finance Committee was due to meet yesterday lunchtime. Owing to printing problems, FELIX is unable to report on the meeting in this issue.

Bar Success

The Union Bar is more popular now than it was last year, ICU Deputy President Dave Kingston told FELIX this week.

Mr Kingston believes this is partly the result of the positive Union approach to rowdiness. He cited the signs that have been posted in the Bar requesting people not to stand on the tables as an example of the way the Union was responding to disturbances.

The Bar, has in Mr Kingston's view, changed from being a 'hacks' bar to one of a students' bar in which students can feel welcome, not intimidated. The promotion of guest ales and the presence of Boddingtons Ale has attracted many students. Mr Kingston added that he hoped that students would be attracted to the Union Bar on Friday night for a pre-revelry booze-up as many drinks are being offered at 50p/pint.

From Friday night Budweiser will be on sale instead of Carlsberg because of complaints about the quality of Carlsberg.

New Garage

Professor Hartley of Biochemistry is to have his own garage on College grounds. Work on the garage has now begun behind the Biochemistry Department, after being delayed for a few weeks owing to bad weather. Professor Hartley lives in a penthouse flat in the Biochemistry building. Jack Parry of the Estates section is handling the building work, but it is unclear as to who is providing the funds. College Secretary John Smith said on Thursday that Prof Hartley's garage would replace one demolished when Biochemistry's Link building was built. He said that the garage was an important facility for Prof Hartley because he has a disabled daughter.

Field Cup Off

Field Cup has been postponed from last Tuesday to next Tuesday. This was because Guilds VP Symon Corns was ill and unable to organise the clues. The Guilds Office was besieged on Tuesday by students worried about Mr Corns, after Guilds Hon Sec Dave Page had put up a large number of posters saying that Field Cup was postponed because Mr Corns had died.

Sport Off

The RCS Soccer 6's and Guilds rugby 7's were postponed last Sunday owing to poor weather. Both events are likely to take place on Sunday March 9.

Planning For Disaster

Incidents at nuclear power plants, like the one in 1979 at Three Mile Island in the United States, are fortunately very rare. However, it is important to consider the potential consequences of such accidents and pre-plan emergency procedures. Debbie Wilkes examines the research being done at IC in this field and the safety measures being taken at home and abroad.

This assessment of possible consequences can be extremely complex, as it has to take into account all the factors of the release, its dispersion into the environment, and the resultant contamination and exposure of human beings. Here at Imperial College, in the Mechanical Engineering Department, a group under Dr Helen Apsimon is looking at numerical models for the dispersion of pollutants in the atmosphere; with the aim of estimating risk on a probabilistic basis and to help in the planning of emergency procedures.

Pre-planning of emergency procedures is of the utmost importance, as in the event of an accident at a nuclear power plant rapid action might be needed to protect people. The form of any protective measures would depend on many different factors including local geography, situation of population density relative to the plant, weather conditions and the magnitude of the release. In the early phases during the release steps might be taken to protect people close to the plant from contamination through atmospheric exposure. For any protective action to be effective there would need to be prior knowledge of which areas were most at risk. Once an atmospheric release had finished there would then be the problem of foodstuffs, especially milk and crops, becoming contaminated with activity deposited from the cloud. At this stage it might be necessary to protect people at a greater distance from the plant and the protective measures might well include destruction of any milk produced in the area. Finally there would be an inquiry, which would involve an in-depth analysis of the consequences over a greater distance. If the most effective emergency procedures are to be produced then all of these factors have to be taken into account.

Dr Apsimon's work originally began with a research project backed by the French Commission Energie Atomique (CEA). The project was to estimate the collective dose to the whole population that would come from the small doses (small compared to the natural background) that result from routine operations. This involved looking at how radioactivity might be dispersed on a European scale, and has subsequently led to further work in this area with the European Commission. The Commission requires countries planning to build nuclear power stations to report to the EEC on the potential transfrontier consequences of an accident in one member state on another member state. By using computer simulations of the dispersion Dr Apsimon has been able to obtain a much fuller picture of the potential consequences of an incident.

When looking at the potential risk all the many different environmental dispersion pathways have to be taken into account, with the result that assessments can be extremely complex. For instance, the characteristics of the terrain around a nuclear power plant may greatly affect the dispersion. Weather conditions at the time of an incident may also have an impact, particularly rain, as precipitation brings the radioactivity down to earth so contaminating the surface and affecting the safety measures needed. A recent development at the Meteorological Office means that there is now better information about the distribution of rainfall in the United Kingdom. Using radar scanning they now produce a map, once every five minutes, showing where it is raining. However, at present this type of service is not available for most other European countries. The group have also been considering the effect of living in cities. In particular whether buildings provide any shielding, and the ways that radioactive material may penetrate buildings.

Dr Apsimon will shortly be chairing an EEC group which is being set up to review computerised assistance in accident assessment. By making use of meteorological data extending over the whole of Europe Dr Apsimon's group have been able to develop computer programs to predict the trajectories of pollutants. These programs were originally developed for use with radioactive pollutants, but they are also valuable for use with other pollutants and are currently being used in Germany for acid rain studies.

Dr. Apsimon is also a motivating force behind the European Association for the Science of Air Pollution (EURASAP), of which she is currently chairman. The association, which was only formed recently, aims to provide a forum for communication and coordination between scientists, from Eastern as well as Western Europe, working in the field of air pollution. So far there has been an encouraging response from scientists all over Europe, and EURASAP has full programme of meetings planned for 1986 beginning in Budapest in April. The international flavour of the association is reflected in the committee which has members from Poland, Norway, the United Kingdom, France, Holland, Hungary and Czechoslovakia. The members are also drawn from many different disciplines including meteorologists, chemists and biologists. But also very important, the association aims to include the people implementing air pollution control measures, so also has members from industry and government bodies. Last week's incident at the Sellafield reprocessing plant is a reminder that although accidents at nuclear power plants are rare, they do happen. In the event of a more serious accident measures to protect people might need to be taken with great speed. This can best be achieved if well researched pre-planned emergency procedures exist.

Valentine Verisimilitude

Yes, it's Valentine's day again, folks, the day when all your friends get more cards than you, even though you posted one to yourself on Wednesday, and deep in the heart of Imperial College there is excitement in the back row of lecture five of the Advanced Chatting-up Techniques course. Our heroes, Luke, Mike, Neil, Oliver, and Pete, all budding IC Bachelors, have each received a Valentine from one of the five luscious beauties in the front row; Andrea, Barbara, Christine, Diane, and Elizabeth. They are trying to guess which girl sent which card.

Luke reckons that Andrea sent Neil's card. Neil, meanwhile, is certain that there is no way Luke's card could have come from Diana or Elizabeth. Mike thinks that Pete's card is probably from Barbara, and Pete says that Mike's card was definitely not from Elizabeth.

None of the cards was actually sent from the girl that can be deduced sent it on the basis of these statements. Not only that, but every statement turned out to be wrong.

One of the girls is Pete's sister, and thus hasn't sent him a valentine and, knowing who she is would enable you to give all the details about who actually sent Valentines to who.

So who did send a Valentine to who, and who is Pete's sister? Answers, etc by Tuesday lunchtime for the £5 prize.

Pennies

I've had no solutions to this, so I'll let it run for another week with a few clues—it really isn't that hard. The easiest strategy works as long as your opponent doesn't put any of his coins along a certain line. A more complex version of this same strategy relies on who puts their coin right in the centre of the table. The strategy works for a circular or rectangular table, but not for a triangular one. Enough? See what you can do.

Everyone loves a list. And we at FELIX are definitely no exception. So, to mark the British Film Industry's worst year for Oscar nominations to date, (not a sausage), FELIX Film Editor, Jim Clayden, has come up with 30 of the best films in and around London. Everything from love heartfelt, (Letter To Brezhnev), to below the belt, (Rocky IV); from crooning women, (Sweet Dreams) to dirty linen, (My Beautiful Laundrette). Needless to say it's only our opinion, and who are we to talk? So, if you think you can do better, and we're sure you can, send us a list of your favourite Oscar nominations, using any categories you can think of. We'll publish the best of the bunch next week.

Roses are red...

Valentines day is upon us once again and little hearts are fluttering all over college. No doubt some of you have sent little messages of endearment to your loved ones through the Valentines column, but if you really want to win over your sweetheart, what better way than with flowers.

Since Christmas I have visited twenty florists all over London, all of which had been recommended to me through various sources. Out of these, I would only be prepared to recommend ten, and of these only three are really suitable for a Valentine posy from a student (some were far too expensive). Felton's and Pulbrook and Gould, as you will notice, are nice and close: whereas The Flowersmith is in the centre of town - please don't let this put you off, it's well worth the trip.

Felton & Sons,
220-224 Brompton Rd, SW3,
Tel 589-4433
Open: 8.30-5.30, Mon-Fri;
8.30-12, Sat.

Felton's is, in my estimation at least, the best place for fresh cut flowers in London.

Its prices are very reasonable and its flowers are of very high quality. Felton's actually goes to the trouble of cutting their flowers with a knife rather than a scissors because they feel that this prolongs the life of the bloom by not closing up the stem. Their service is very good, their delivery charges within London are among the lowest I've come across (about £4 max), and they have the added attraction of a tempting display of delicious (but fairly expensive) handmade chocolates. They accept all four major credit cards and are founder members of Interflora.

Pulbrook and Gould
181 Sloane St, SW1,
Tel 235-3920/3186,
Open: 9-5.30, Mon-Fri.

An old family firm, Pulbrook and Gould specializes in flowers and foliage from the British countryside. A little bit more expensive than Felton's, (as you could probably guess from the address) this shop certainly has more snob appeal. Sells lovely roses in varying shades of red, pink and cream, any of which would melt the heart of even the most icy individuals. Accepts all four major credit cards and is a member of Interflora.

The Flowersmith,
34 Shelton St, Covent
Garden, WC2,
Tel 240-6688
Open: 10-6, Mon-Fri; 11.30-6, Sat.

If you want something unusual, alternative, or avant-garde, then this shop is a must. Exotic varieties of fresh and dried flowers (from the beautiful to the grotesque) will be arranged for you for exactly the effect you want. All of the work done is very up-to-date, stylish, and good value for money. As well as having all sorts of obscure but gorgeous flowers they do orchids in a glass... one of the few places in London which does. Excellent service, reasonable delivery prices within London. Takes Diners Club, Access and Visa.

I hope you enjoy the flowers... and the effect they have!

Telephones are blue...

Two minutes with Roger could do wonders for your love life.

No, not a quotation from 2nd Lt. Preece's Presidential Campaign but a bold heading from the back page of this week's Time Out magazine.

Roger is Roger Elliot, his telephone number is 0070-00777 and he offers a telephone Horoscope service with a romantic/sexual twist. With her heart in her mouth, FELIX deb Jane Spiegel tapped the keypad and listened to the dulcet tones of Cupid Elliot over the wires. This is what he said:

Aquarius

You may have difficulties transferring your affections from one lover to another.

Aries

Today will be busy and you may be late for a romantic date - so use the telephone.

Virgo

If you have a problem with love then now is the time to talk it over with a friend.

Pisces

Be prepared for a surprise: heart-melt and trembling knees. Something good will happen today.

Leo

If you are going to a party today, you may expect a flirty atmosphere.

Taurus

Lunchtime is the time for flirting, but don't act sexily at dinner.

Scorpio

Today is the day for being warm and open-hearted.

Sagittarius

Get very near to the person you love today. Even if you're not feeling sexy, at least you'll be close.

Gemini

Today is the day that you will get into a pickle with two loved ones.

Cancer

Expect to be manipulated by your sweetheart, but the opportunity for revenge will arise.

Capricorn

Don't let anything get in the way of plans you have made with your partner.

Libra

You will find it easy to shine both at work and play.

Baha'i

The third world war has already begun. Its victims are the populace of the starving third world, murdered by us because we choose to spend our mis-gotten money not on them but on SDI and Trident. And no doubt, when we have finished with them, like mad dogs we will turn on ourselves, finally smithereening spaceship earth as completely as the unfortunate 'Challenger'. Present technology and present attitudes do not allow any softer option.

I would not paint such a gloomy picture if I thought there was any way out.

It would be customary for a person of any religious persuasion such as myself to see as a solution to the world's problems the need to unite in a common cause ('after all, we're all Gods children aren't we? So let's forget our differences and live in peace...'). But while I believe that to be true in a way, at the present time it is not a particularly illuminating or useful observation for there are genuine ideological differences fragmenting society. Communist and Capitalist, Christian and Muslim, Conservative and Labour, 'and everybody hates the Jews' (Tom Lehrer). 'Forgetting our differences' means, for many people, forgetting the faith for which they stand. But history is full of tales of people dying for their beliefs, and there is no particular reason to believe that the trend will not continue, especially since it is at times of crisis that we are called upon to be more principled, not less.

So I suggest that we do not waste effort by pleading with people to forget their ideological differences. Rather, we should suggest to them that they postpone the conflict, and meanwhile get along with the business of keeping ourselves alive - 'ourselves' including, of course, the people in the third world, or what is left of them. All this is, indeed, in the long-term interest of the continuance of the ideological debate, since this would otherwise be impossible if we were all dead.

In practical terms this means making a mental note to prove the ideological point some time in the future, and for the present, to heal the wounds. How nice it would be to hear conciliatory language between religions and political parties. How nice it would be to see the back of 'Rambo' and 'Rocky 4'.

It's just like in a marriage (I speak from experience). One has to be mature and rise above the level of petty, unending bickering, by making a mental note to resolve the point of principle at a less highly charged moment, and in the short term, to kiss and make up.

Bahais believe that while the 'Most Great Peace' (Which I interpret as being the time of the solution of ideological problems) is still a long, long way off, nevertheless the 'Lesser Peace' of political trust and tolerance is imminent, because mankind has now reached the stage of maturity. I do hope that we Bahais are right, because otherwise, quite honestly, it's curtains.

The Imperial College Bahai Society is holding a meeting 'On the theme of Peace' on Wednesday 19th February, 7:00 p.m. in the Common room, level 8, Physics building.

Speakers from the National Peace Council, WIST, and Bahai National Centre will speak respectively on: 1986 - International Year of Peace; Role of Women in achieving Peace; The Promise of World Peace

Opsoc

Opsoc's thirtieth Annual production in College will be 'Princess Ida' by WS Gilbert and AS Sullivan. Imperial College Operatic Society, to give it its more formal name was formed in 1956 to 'produce light opera in the South Kensington Community'. Ever since the first show ('Victorian Melodrama'), we have presented an extravaganza, usually by G&S, each February, although in the past we have performed works by Offenbach, Mozart and Bizet. The society completed the fourteen G&S Opera canon last year with the 'Grand Duke'.

The society maintains a high standard by the involvement of Music students, as well as consistently having a high quality orchestra made up of old members, music students and IC students. Each year we put on a tour to Budleigh Salterton, and last year, our 18th visit, we were given a civic reception in the town. This summer, we are to tour with 'The Mikado', and if you are interested in being in the show, please contact any member at 'Ida' after the show.

Princess Who?

'Princess Ida' was written around the same time as 'Iolanthe' at the height of G&S's success, and despite the illness of its composer at the time it contains some of the best music throughout. It differs from the rest in that it has three acts as opposed to the normal two, and the libretto is written in blank verse; the actual libretto being a reworking of an earlier Gilbert play. The show was a satire of Women's lib, being written as such establishments as Girton College were being built, continuing Gilbert's use of controversial subjects. Sounds boring—what's it about?

Fortunately the plot is not as complex as you might remember last years 'Grand Duke'...It is set in the days when knights were bold. Well it's like this, there were two kings, one of whom's daughter was betrothed to the other's son. In the meantime, however, the Princess had gone away and started a 'Woman's University' to which, not surprisingly, men were not permitted. The Prince and a couple of his friends decide to dress as women to try to capture the love of the Princess. Needless to say they get found out and his father turns up and a good old fight takes place. Of course, a lot manages to go on as well, but then you'll just have to come to see that—it's worth coming to, I can assure you!

Who's doing what?

The show is conducted by Dick Stockton, who was in the Society for many years, and has now returned to wave his arms. Meanwhile, William White, who played Grand Duke Rudolph last year is Directing. Please come along if you can, it's not as boring as you may think....

Where can I get tickets?

Tickets are available from the Haldane Library, level 2, Sherfield at lunchtimes, Opsoc members and the door (whilst stocks last). See you there.

Many people in this country have never read one of the four gospels in the Bible since they were children. Many people have never decided who Jesus was. He definitely existed historically, many other sources apart from the Bible testify to this.

Who was he? A brilliant teacher, orator, moralist—yes but he claimed to be more than that.

Who was he? God. Anyone who claims to be God today would normally find himself in a lunatic asylum pretty quick. Jesus could hardly be described as mad. Was he a deliberate trickster or an evil man? It doesn't fit with the facts. The way he lived and other people's testimony about his life don't leave us this option.

Jesus said 'if you have seen me, you have seen the father' (JOHN 14) Why not read John's Gospel, look for yourself, find out what Jesus actually claimed and decide for yourself. Who was He? What did He come to do? Come and find out.

And lo, it came to pass in the days of Frank the Usurper there arose a great torment in the land. Runes were cast and prophets warned of omens foretelling doom. A leprechaun was seen playing the bagpipes, whilst two goblins were overheard discussing the benefits of aluminium replacement window frames. And there arose in the land a great wringing of hands and rubbing of genitals and people cried 'Oh who will lead us out of these dark times?'

The task was undertaken by one Bilbo Jefferson, prince of the Halfcuts. The Great Deeds of Bilbo, Scourge of Middlesex, are recorded in the book 'There and Back Again (stopping for a few bevvies on the way.' This document records Bilbo's clash with the forces of darkness, his struggles with orcs, dragons, trolls and housing benefit officials. For at this time a great darkness lay over the land, and good people walked in the shadow of fear. In the hours of darkness it is said that innocent-looking kitchen utensils performed unspeakable acts with consenting pieces of cutlery.

But Bilbo rode forth. Red was his banner, black was his steed and brown were his trousers. With the help of a few loyal Rotarians, Bilbo overthrew the Darkness and made the land safe. Once more a man could walk freely in the open and purchase Nescafe over the counter without fear of recrimination.

HOW TO SPEND THE SUMMER IN THE STATES AND LIVE TO TELL THE TALE

There will be a presentation given by a representative from BUNAC on Tuesday 18th February at 6pm in the Union Lounge. The presentation will incorporate a slide show, as well as how to apply for Bunacamp, Work America and Kamp. There will also be plenty of useful information on how to stay alive as cheaply as possible for a complete summer in the States. Refreshments will be provided. Anyone interested in applying for any of these schemes

Hyde

Park

Relays

On Saturday 22nd February Imperial College Cross Country and Athletics Club are holding the 38th Annual Nike Imperial College Hyde Park Relays.

The event is a road relay of 6 laps for men and 4 (slightly shorter) legs for women held over a course of some 3 miles a lap in Hyde Park.

The competition is held mainly for students and, probably boasts the largest student participation in the country for such an event. Particularly strong this year amongst the students are of course Loughborough University who include amongst their number Chris McGeorge, Ikem Billy and recently crowned UAU/BUSF cross country champion David Buzza. Also look out for ex-IC student Sam Carey—now running for Sheffield (2nd in UAU/BUSF). A certain Tyneside guest team is causing considerable interest this year and will prove a stern test for the students teams. It includes Geoff Turnbull, 1984 London Marathon winner Charlie Spedding and possibly a Mr S Cram (World one mile no 1, world 2000m no 1, world no 2 and first man below 3.30min at 1500m etc etc— I think you know the guy!!)

On the home front, the London University front man is Mark Scrutton of St Thomas's who was 5th in the World Student Games in 1985 at 10000m: Imperial College have a strong presence in the London University side with 3 of the six man team.

Imperial College entrants
We will enter as many Imperial College teams as possible—people (men and women) wishing to take part should contact IC Cross-Country Captain, Jon Lea, Chem Eng IV immediately—teas and T-shirts for participants.

Since the authorities will not allow us to mark the course we need people to prepare refreshments and to help marshal the course—volunteers should turn up at 9.30am on the morning of the event and ask for either Bryan Gamblin, marshal officer, or Mike Jones, Hyde Park Relays Organiser. If you are interested, it would be helpful if you could contact Bryan Gamblin Mech Eng 2 before hand.

Football

IC 1sts 2—RHBNC 1sts 1

IC's winning league run was stretched to seven games (including one walkover) in a rather scrappy affair at Harlington. Having been beaten twice by New College already this season it was imperative that IC beat this particular jinx side to maintain their challenge for the Premier Division title.

In a game in which neither side managed to assert themselves, IC opened the scoring through striker Dave Lynne who eventually forced the ball home following a goalmouth scramble.

Almost immediately, New College equalised when keeper Nick Tarn was caught out of position by a long range shot.

The score remained level until half time. The second half started much as the first had finished and the game appeared to be heading for a draw when, 10 minutes from time, Alex Lunghi provided Dave Lynne with an empty goal, 10 yards out.

Despite a few more late attempts by the IC forwards, the score remained at 2-1, with IC just deserving their victory.

Badminton

IC (mixed) 6—St Georges 3

Despite having only 2 pairs, instead of 3 (there's a slight shortage of loonies at IC), IC were still confident that they could annihilate St Georges.

London Underground did their best to delay us, but only by half an hour.

The match started well, with our first pair (Sean and Robin) successfully grinding St George's first pair, into the ground 15-3, 15-3, with a brilliant display of badminton by IC. The second pair also proved equally brilliant in beating St Georges second pair 15-1, 15-0.

Once this successful start had been established, it was merely formality on IC's part to clean up the remaining 4 games.

This left IC with a 6-3 victory, the 3 games against having been conceded due to only 2 pairs from IC.

Sailing

Sailing

When the legendary team set off for Norwich on Saturday morning, even some of its own members couldn't believe that they were seriously going for a sailing match. This might explain why, to the rest of the team's disapproval, they didn't turn up. But despite the rather unsuitable weather and the disconcerting comments of boring reasonable passers by, the hard core of the team set off in high spirits to fight its way through blizzards and arrive at the frozen broads of Norfolk.

The first fight to be won was convincing the opposition (UEA) that we were seriously considering to break the thin layer of ice and race against them. For some mysterious reason they were more keen to go to the pub and challenge our drinking. A short talk and a promise from our team that we were willing to have a drinks race afterwards convinced them there was no place for wimps in our team.

(even if our Commodore still insists on using a lilo to sleep on) and that we were determined to go out there and race.

The start of the first race, with the IC boats in first and second position and the opposition trailing behind showed that we really meant what we said. The rest of the races proved to be as easy, so by the end of the day we could boast that we had won all the races in the match, an achievement that shouldn't be underestimated.

This was done without the help of Ape, who viewing the weather and the lack of his dry-suit decided that being team photographer wasn't a bad idea after all. This proved rather useful when Robson, after winning the last race decided that he didn't need to hold on the tiller anymore. Lowe, who was unfortunate enough to be crewing for him at the time, was not delighted when he saw the boat capsize. After this demonstration of skill by our team members, UEA admitted defeat and everyone was pleased to go back into the clubhouse where hot soup was waiting.

Wednesday Results

There was no field sport this week because of the bad weather. However we have got the results from RSM v Cambourne (played on Sunday) which arrived late....

IC RFC 18—King's College 0

With many IC regulars on call for University of London, this was never going to be an easy game for Imperial, however it was 'victory in the cold' not 'fire in the heart' as IC build up for the Gutteridge cup final.

It was Tom 'boogie woogie' Goetz who dominated the loose forward exchanges and touching down twice-one from a forty yard charge (but it was late in the evening when I heard this). The forward superiority allowed the IC backs to 'run and have fun' but Kings tackled well throughout the match. The highlight of the game was when 'creature Jenkins' found an oval shaped thing in his hands and instead of opening his legs and showing his class in true 'Juanitorenna style' he opted for the kick to touch, disappointing in that all the Kings' players were behind him.

Snooker

National Tournament

The rank outsiders IC were unleashed on an unsuspecting Birmingham side and won 4-1. We then had a close shave with Queen's Belfast 'B', winning 3-2 by virtue of Adrian Feasby stealing a frame after flukeing the pink and his opponent fouling on the black. On Sunday we started well, beating Bradford 3-2 but failed to head our group losing a decider 1-0 to Cardiff.

The favourites Leeds and Queen's 'A' still did not realise that we could pot at all and were contemplating the final. The quarter finals saw us defeat Salford 6-3 and Jonathan West made a break of 47, the highest of the tournament. Queen's 'A' thought they had us beaten at 5-3 in the semi-finals but Richard Wiles and Clive Robert put IC level, and in a tense final frame Leroy Wint outplayed his opponent with a break of 25 and put IC in the final.

The final started at 9.15pm with IC taking leads of 1-0 and 2-1 in a best of 15 frames match. We then quickly assumed control of the game at 5-2 and 7-4. The final score of 10-5 represented an excellent team performance.

"In the future everyone will look like a baked bean can for 15 minutes..." Andy Warthog

Some caustic wit pointed out to me that today is Valentines Day and it would be a good idea to include some appropriate ideas in this column. So having read Time Out's little piece on their own lonely hearts column I thought something like, 'Scruffy mature journalist seeks kindred wally for mutual cynicism, boredom and tedious conversations about Roy Harper gigs' might fit the bill. Looking at the sort of witticisms which actually make it into print I feel a bit humbled though. In addition I am not really seeking to meet London's Gay population on an intimate basis, which would cut out a large proportion of the small ad reading population. But it must be said that commercialisation does seem to have crept into the way people meet each other to a tremendous degree. I'm sure there's very little you can't get delivered to the loved one of your dreams by an out of work actor. Maybe this is one of life's necessary evils in a place like London, where social life is so often interpreted as 'strutting your funky whatsit' in a darkened room where the music is so loud that, the person you thought was a liberal minded student into outdoor pursuits is actually a married young conservative into collecting Victorian bondage gear! Personally I think it cheapens the whole affair if you pay (ironic, huh!) some Albanian mountain cyclist to mutter pre-composed words of endearment and thrust a box of 'Black Tray' at the target of your affection. Mind you if it's all for Rag that's another matter. And hey! — why are we only allowed to be romantic one day a year?

When I took over this page someone said something about ideas for things to do in our glorious capital. But once in a while there's nothing wrong with taking liberties — so this week's suggestion is "clear off". 'Very droll' I hear you say, but I'm desperate. Even the less astute of you might have noticed that BR has slashed fares for Railcard holders for February to one-quarter of the normal cost. This means the reduction on some journeys can almost pay for the card — spend money, save pounds (er?). Last weekend I went to Bristol to see a gentleman called Roy Harper. This will make anyone who knows me cringe at the thought of another plug for some ageing ex-hippy (but he really is dynamite live, makes Billy Bragg look like Noddy goes to social commentary land). The point is that most people can probably think of someone or somewhere they'd like to visit and now is a smart time to go and (in the words of the immortal Pink Fairies) DO IT.

Well so much for pointing out the obvious (as an old colleague on the Tirane Times once said to me while relating the story of how he had pointed out to the great Eugene Zhog, the 1962 Albanian cycling champion, that it would be impossible to leap to freedom in the west, on his pushbike from the top of Mount Hoxha — the old fool was blown out of the air by half a dozen machine guns before he plunged into the Strait of Otranto — but they never did find the body!). More depressing disappearances this week include Spitting Image and half a pint of milk out of my fridge. I must admit that the former is more distressing but the replacement Hot Metal, about the sordid newspaper business, has got some good reviews. Right now a bit of sordidness would go down just great around here to liven things up.

Speaking of things sordid I always wondered what people who play Dungeons and Dragons really got upto. But I have been informed by our local aficionados that there is more to role-playing games than sitting round a table saying things like "I've just zapped your dragon with a Magic Missile". The general impression seems to be that D&D is a reasonable but rather limited game, and cheap once you've spent the first £100 on books and starter packs! The local loonies seem to prefer Runequest (edition 2) — mysterious by name, and a mystery to me. It's wrong to be too cynical about this as some of the games shops around London are well worth a browse (I find that browsing shops is often the cheapest and most engrossing pastime in London). THE shop for people with strong fantasy urges is Forbidden Planet in Denmark Street, but the place itself, although it has a wide range of SF books etc, has been described as a 'hole in the wall in Tin-Pan Alley'. Near to Hamlet Gardens is Games Workshop which is full of posters giving a vast number of events and seems to be very helpful. Games People Play up in Notting Hill is, I have been told, good for independent models (ie other than the usual Citadel crud). And two more mainstream shops worth a look at least are the Virgin Games Centre and Hamleys. Personally I can usually spend hours in Hamleys regressing to childhood.

On to films and my favourite venue, The Scala, has some good bills this month. On Saturday the 15th there is an all-nighter featuring Dune, 200 Motels (Frank Zappa), The Wall, Barbarella and Up In Smoke. Then on Thursday 20th there is Dr Strangelove and Apocalypse Now (two of the best films on the madness of war ever made) as a double bill. Saturday 22nd sees another all-nighter with Nightmare On Elm Street, Blood Simple, Videodrome, Company Of Wolves and The Evil Dead (yes the one you're not supposed to be able to get on video). And finally on Friday the 28th there is The Terminator and a film called Death Line. The latter is about a group of survivors from an 1892 rail tunnel disaster preying on commuters on the underground, it's got to be gross!

All night bills at the Scala are £3.70 and start at about 11:30pm. Normal bills are £2.70 (or £1.70 on production of a student card during the afternoon). There is also a 50p initial membership. I can't claim that the Scala is the most luxurious cinema in London but it has a certain character and the food stall is a lot better than the tacky, indigestible, overpriced, rubbish found in most west end flicks.

So to the end of another week's rambling and pretending to be a pretentious listings mag. I would like to dedicate this week's column to all those people who have made mountain cycling in Albania what it is today. Its not always fun being a critic, in the words of Eric of Aramathea the sports correspondent of the Galilee Observer 'crucifixion is murder on the hands...'

Give your heart away this Valentines Day

Affiliation Vote Latest

Reactions to Kings College Union's vote to affiliate to NUS have varied. Colin Byrne, the NUS Press Officer, said that the Union's reaction was 'absolute jubilation, and a vindication of NUS's campaign against the continued erosion of the student grant'. Duane Passman and Michael Connolly, Education and Welfare Officers for the Kensington and Chelsea sites respectively said that they were 'delighted that the students feel that NUS is an important organisation', adding that they were 'looking forward to some great national campaigns'.

Ian Markham, Education and Welfare Officer for the Strand site, which before the merger was not in the NUS, was more hesitant. He said he had enjoyed the 'lively campaign' which involved 'national hacks' from both the NUS and the Federation of Conservative Students, who are opposed to all compulsory student unions. He added that he felt the Conservatives had alienated a large section of the students' and consequently the Union voted to affiliate. He gave the NUS 'critical support' but hoped that Kings College Union would engage in constructive reform.

Nicola Rossi, President of the University of London Union, of which Imperial College Students are members was 'very happy' that Kings had affiliated.

OBITUARY

John Boroughs

John Boroughs, College Security Officer, died on 10 February.

He joined the College after having spent 25 years in the police where he was class 1 emergency car driver.

Always helpful, courteous and efficient and never ruffled by circumstances he will be missed by all who knew him.

Prof Dorothy Wedderburn

Jolly Good Fellows

Baroness Warnock, DBE, Mistress of Girton College, Cambridge and former Chairman of the controversial Warnock Committee, is among five newly elected Fellows of Imperial College this year. It was the Warnock Committee which recently produced a report on the medical ethics involved in research on human embryos and 'in vitro' fertilisation, and raised such issues as whether cold storage of embryos should be allowed in the interest of science.

The remaining four fellows are also prominent people, with close links to Imperial College.

Professor Dorothy Wedderburn, Principal of Royal Holloway and Bedford New College, University of London was previously Head of the Industrial Sociology Unit at IC.

Sir Geoffrey Allen, FRS once held the post of Professor of Chemical Engineering at IC, and is now Director of Research and Engineering for Unilever PLC.

Security Problem

the fitting out of two extra security rooms.

Mr Peter Hallworth, Managing Surveyor (Residences), said that he had already acted upon these complaints. Locks have been fitted on to the doors of the kitchen stairways, stoking access to the residents' staircases, and also on the service duct covers. Mr Hallworth said he was still dealing with the warden and housekeeper on how to solve the problem of stolen mail. He has suggested that the post be put in boxes and the residents be given a key to them. Mr Hallworth said that this was the arrangement in Evelyn Gardens where it seemed to work very well.

Student representative and the Hall wardens have suggested that post be moved into the new security rooms.

Mines To Pay Fees

The Royal School of Mines is paying the tuition fees for a student in the Mineral Resources Engineering Department, after his LEA refused to fund a fourth year of study. Chris O'Brien was the only student to reach the final year in the recently introduced four-year course in Mineral Resources Engineering. Mr O'Brien was registered for a BEng degree, but because this award will be upgraded to an MEng next year he would have been the only student ever to receive a BEng for this course. To avoid this anomalous situation Mr O'Brien was awarded a BSc(Eng) on completion of his third year, and is now studying for an MSc with other postgraduate students. The RSM were forced to pay Mr O'Brien's fees after his LEA refused to pay for his MSc.

Thief Caught

A thief was caught in the Chemical Engineering Department at midday last Friday. Dr Haroon Mahgerefth, a postdoctoral research assistant, discovered a stranger in his office who claimed to be looking for an old friend. Dr Mahgerefth was suspicious and so offered to escort the stranger to the messenger. He told a friend, Dr Farshad Motamedi, in Persian, to accompany them as he was worried that the stranger might try to escape. The messenger, Neil Grant, asked the stranger for identification. When the man couldn't provide any, Mr Grant called security who called the police. Dr Mahgerefth returned to his office and found that his wallet was missing. The police subsequently discovered that this had been stolen by the stranger.

Snooker Win

Imperial College won the 1986 National Universities Snooker Tournament held in Leeds last weekend. IC beat Birmingham, Queen's Belfast, Bradford and Salford on the way to meeting Bath in the final. The team overwhelmed Bath 10-5 to win the title at the first attempt. During the Salford match Jonathan West made the highest break of the tournament with 47.

Correction

Rates will not be included as a separate item on hall bills (as reported in FELIX February 7). Students, though, will be able to claim rate rebate. This means that students living in Southside will be able to claim rebates of £1.58. Claim forms are available from Student Services.
